The ACLU of Colorado fiscal year runs from April 1 to March 31. It was an historic year, with major victories for LGBT rights, immigration, prison reform, and the rights of people living in poverty, and defense of the First Amendment. Here is a timeline of some of our biggest moments:

2014

JUNE 2014

Governor Hickenlooper signed two new ACLU-backed bills banning the use of long-term solitary confinement for prisoners with serious mental illnesses and ending the practice of putting people in jail because they are too poor to pay fines and court fees. Both were passed by overwhelming bipartisan majorities.

AUGUST 2014

The ACLU of Colorado publicly supported Jefferson County student protesters who objected to censorship of their AP World History curriculum.

SEPTMBER 2014

The ACLU of Colorado filed a lawsuit against Douglas County school district and a private religious school. The lawsuit argued that a Douglas County school district teacher coerced a student into趣用 personally funded tax payer money to fund her private religious school. The court struck down the use of public funds to support private religious schools.

DECEMBER 2014

The ACLU of Colorado helped defeat a bill that would have allowed businesses and private religious schools to discriminate against LGBT individuals.

FEBRUARY 2015

Youth Rising! At our 2015 Annual Meeting, we honored the students and young people who made 2014 an historic year of youth activism in Colorado.

MARCH 2015

The ACLU of Colorado helped pass a wide-ranging set of new police accountability laws that included the “Right to Rest Act,” which ended unconstitutional restrictions on panhandling in about a dozen cities. We were also successful in advocating against “right-to-discriminate” laws that would have allowed businesses and individuals to claim religious exemptions to Colorado’s anti-discrimination laws. The ACLU of Colorado publicly supported Jefferson County student protesters who objected to censorship of their AP World History curriculum.

JUNE 2014

The ACLU of Colorado successfully argued before the Colorado Civil Rights Commission that Masterpiece Cakeshop violated Colorado’s anti-discrimination laws by refusing to make a wedding cake for Charlie Craig and David Mullins.

FEBRUARY 2015

The ACLU Legislative team fought off several attacks on civil liberties during the 2015 legislative session, including more than a dozen attempts to restrict reproductive rights, and two “Right-to-Discriminate” bills that would have allowed businesses and individuals to claim religious exemptions to Colorado’s anti-discrimination laws.

MARCH 2015

The ACLU of Colorado achieved full marriage equality. As part of the Why Marriage Matters campaign, the ACLU of Colorado delivered 5,000 petition signatures to Attorney General John Suthers urging him to stop defending Colorado’s unconstitutional same-sex marriage ban.

JANUARY 2015

The ACLU of Colorado helped defeat a bill that would have allowed businesses and private religious schools to discriminate against LGBT individuals.

MAY 2014

The ACLU of Colorado successfully argued before the Colorado Civil Rights Commission that Masterpiece Cakeshop violated Colorado’s anti-discrimination laws by refusing to make a wedding cake for Charlie Craig and David Mullins.

JUNE 2014

The ACLU of Colorado was a $30,000 settlement for Claudia Valdez, a domestic violence survivor who was wrongly jailed for three days on a federal immigration charge.

OCTOBER 2014

After years of struggle and activism, Colorado achieved full marriage equality.

JULY 2014

The ACLU of Colorado helped defeat a bill that would have allowed businesses and private religious schools to discriminate against LGBT individuals.

NOVEMBER 2014

The ACLU of Colorado helped defeat a bill that would have allowed businesses and private religious schools to discriminate against LGBT individuals.

SEPTEMBER 2014

The ACLU of Colorado publicly supported Jefferson County student protesters who objected to censorship of their AP World History curriculum.
